INTRODUCTION

In our country, 97% of all residents live together into families, the remaining three percent – that is, the elderly who are left alone, orphaned from parents and brought up in orphanages, those who live in temporary Uzbekistan from another country-are also not afraid of the love of family members, loved ones, compatriots, humanitarian people in various state and non-governmental organizations. In this sense, a family is a sacred space in which a person communicates his happiness and happiness, his dreams, his goal, pushes the aim of life by perceiving himself as a person. The family is the oldest of the social institutions. Despite the peat and complexity of the historical periods experienced by mankind, and especially able to withstand the great changes and reforms that took place in the 19th and 20th centuries, this dwelling is a well-preserved structure in terms of its system, composition and fulfillment of obligations to society. Taking into account the fact that the family is made up of people, and life-life in it is formed by interaction between them, it can also be called the complex of purely psychological processes. Family is an integral part of society. There is no one people, nation or society that has not taken into account the problems, values of the family and its surroundings in its history of development and in determining the prospect of progress. Any prospect cannot be imagined separately from the interests of the family. After all, for every person, the family is the beginning of life, the preamble of all things. In addition, each person associates his happiness and happiness with his family above all, that is, only a person who is happy in his own home, in his family feels a full-fledged appreciation.

DISCUSSION AND RESULTS

The socio-psychological aspect of images of happiness in women depends on the basic concepts of care, sexual fantasies and self-compassion, the expected behavior of society and socially expected roles and disciplines.

- The main concepts of care: women expect to achieve goals in care, such as happiness, happiness, social cooperation, mutual love and single self-compassion, family relationships and peace. They want to win cooperation and love in a lively family life, in their care and family relationships.
- Sexual fantasies and self-compassion: sexual fantasies and self-compassion for women are related to factors such as self-compassion training, family burdens and success in family relationships. They want to have independence, rights in the family life, to have their own strength and strength.
- Expected behavior of society: women expect to see in the social environment with Lady, respect and stability. They want to master fair treatment, stability and protection of the right. Women want to firmly contribute to freedom and stability in society, remind their voice and ensure social participation.
- Social roles and disciplines: women are expected to be active in several roles in society, including family, professional fields, politics, culture, training guidance, international organizations, etc. They want to assimilate into intellectual and economic development in their own way, and they want society to persevere in decisions, leadership and independent life.

- Sexual experience and social expectations: Women influence the reading of images of happiness in social and psychological aspects. Expectations about getting happiness in a community, victories, Social Administration, and future agreements, harass how women feel and appreciate themselves.
- Social norm and sexual egalitarianism: women's visions of happiness affect issues of sexual stability and sexual egalitarianism. This can be avoided by prohibiting against social norms and Priorities, eliminating gender differences, and promoting sexual stability.
- Culture and historical spreads: women's visions of happiness can be associated with culture, history and Idea. In some, historical outbreaks, Sacred Games of Idea and meaning, involve taking a guide from happiness for women, or having services because of it.
- What society opposes: the imagination of happiness can also influence what society opposes. For some, women are considered the sacred embodiment of happiness and good luck, but for some it appears as something unrelated or unexpected as authenticity.
- Personal psychology: the imagination of happiness testifies to the personal psychology of a person. Women's visions of happiness can increase their self-confidence and motivation in relation to their fantasies, goals and rewards.

Socio-psychological aspects of women's perceptions of happiness can change depending on variables and indicators of society. Also, their personal feelings, family responsibilities and circumstances, and religious and cultural experiences will also be important in shaping visions of happiness.
