Dear Editor

I would like to submit an article entitled Creating New Abilities with Language for consideration by the International Journal of Literature and Languages. My submission contains 23 pages, 14 images, 2 appendixes and 2 files for downloading by your readers.

My article shows that by speaking the language that I call the Soral language we acquire a new ability to understand the meaning of words that we have never heard before. Many other aspects of our language are also improved. I identify seven abilities that are either entirely new abilities or are an improvement on existing abilities. The language is structured so that each word has a sound that identifies that word as being in a particular grammatical category. The language uses Microsoft Excel computer program to create a structure with the properties described above. I believe that Soral language can make a significant advance in human communication because this language offers benefits that other languages do not provide. The benefits of the Soral language make it suitable for adoption as a second language by countries throughout the world.

Much work remains to be done. Artificial intelligence can play an important role. I have submitted an audio file that was created using artificial intelligence and a Microsoft Excel file in addition to the main manuscript. Could you please provide links on page 13 of my manuscript to enable readers to download these files. Please address all correspondence concerning my article to me at dougwatson87@gmail.com.

Thank you for your consideration of my manuscript submission.
